^ "The sound of the songs as starting point. With a true sense of the space of the environment you found you", which he thought was a very unusual request at that moment![] In order to release an album at the end of 1986, U2 created a study in January of that year in Danesmoate House, a Georgian house in Rathfarnham, Ireland, at the foot of the mountains of Wicklow. [14] [17] The Edge had seen the residence months earlier while hunting the house with his wife and had convinced the owner to rent her to the band. [17] Their plan was to find inspiration from the converted recording space and use it to create the atmosphere musically, just as they did with Slane castle for the unforgettable fire sessions in 1984. [14] an improvised control room With tape machines, a mixing console and other outboard equipment were created in the Danesmoate dining room, with the adjacent living room used for registration and performance. [14] The large doors that separate the rooms have been replaced with a glass screen and to maintain a relaxed "non-Studio" atmosphere for the sessions, the control room was nicknamed the "lyric room"

[16] Lenois' strategy was to encourage the band members to make their parts work in advance and to capture the most possible the essence of a live band, alive, the possibility of subsequent overdubbing on which to fall back.[18][19] This was a change for U2, who previously recorded each instrument separately and then layered them into the mix.[13] To support his approach of having all the band members recording in a room together, Lanois eschewed having them wear headphones in favour of using monitor speakers due to their power; Mullen and bassist Adam Clayton used two each. Southern U2 had suggested their use of the sleeve design to discover their religious signposts. The early letters named the place after the Old Testament prophet, Joshua, and the word stretching branches reminded them of Joshua raising his hands in prayer.[84] The following day, Bono declared that the album should be titled The Joshua Tree.[7] That morning,[80] while driving on Route 190 near Darwin, they spotted a lone-standing tree in the desert.[17] Corbin had been hoping to find a single tree, as he thought it would result in better photographs than if he shot the band among a group of trees.[79] They stopped the bus and photographed with the lone plant for about 20 minutes, something the Edge called "fairly spontaneous".[66] Despite shooting in the desert, the group dealt with cold weather during part of the trip. Southern U2 had suggested their use of the sleeve design to discover their religious signposts. The early letters named the place after the Old Testament prophet, Joshua, and the word stretching branches reminded them of Joshua raising his hands in prayer.[84] The following day, Bono declared that the album should be titled The Joshua Tree.[7] That morning,[80] while driving on Route 190 near Darwin, they spotted a lone-standing tree in the desert.[17] Corbin had been hoping to find a single tree, as he thought it would result in better photographs than if he shot the band among a group of trees.[79] They stopped the bus and photographed with the lone plant for about 20 minutes, something the Edge called "fairly spontaneous".[66] Despite shooting in the desert, the group dealt with cold weather during part of the trip. I think there were a lot of headaches, isolating people and having to build baffles around the place.[16] The Edge called the house "more sombre" but said it had a "solid unpretentious quality that seemed to hold the energy Eams taht [98]1.YR0TSH1 LUTLUC DNA .LAICOS, LACUSUM ROF TNIMOCEB ROF EMAAF FOJ LLAH YMARF lht otni detsudni sav eert aushj eht, 8881. .Yllicitium yllicremmoc tsom eht in the detsic rramtted .Yljev ŋ'w ŋ'w ŋ'w tuohtr ro htw eŋ 771 .p .8J002 (EGECM B Å 2U .MOC.Sgnoszu. .Wey dlrow stacsq. 7891 hcram 12. .-llow Eerht Kabc Tigr Tjr Eht Sleef The .7-866917-00-0 NBSI .
